Kapitel 3: Of things considered normal

Well...after a long wait, finally the next chapter of 'Interactions'

Sorry...this one really is short.

But since it is a drabble...well... Hope you like it anyway!

Chapter three

Of things considered normal

Batou is a cyborg almost 100 machine, so it ought to be okay.

And for Batou it is. It's not only okay, but even completely normal to get new cyber-prosthetics. Like when his leg is broken during his fight with Kuze.

But for Togusa it isn't. He doesn't know if it's just his mind that is either seriously outdated or still thinks too 'human' to accept that, yes, you can simply switch parts of your body...or the complete body if required.

Or maybe there is another reason; maybe it's just the after effect of the worry and uncertainty he felt when Batou actually did get hurt.

It is just a uneasy feeling that creeps up every time something like this happens. But if he said that out loud, the others would probably laugh at him. So he doesn't. He just keeps quiet, while observing Batou flexing his new limbs in test.

And he can't help but feel a shudder running down his spine. A bad feeling indeed.

As you might have guessed this takes place sometime after Batou's fight with Kuze in episode 21 "Embarrassment". And then the conversation between Batou and Togusa about the new body parts. I just love that scene.
