Sometimes I feel like nothing in this world could ever hurt me. Wind is pulling on my hair, making it dance. I look right into your eyes as we talk. I dive into their bottomless green, take it in with every detail. I breath in the cold air, the wind. It smells like sky, endless blue, with a little bit of your hair gel and my body lotion. I feel so fee, so alive.

In this moment we are immortal. We could jump of a bridge, sleep on the highway, and drink each other's poison like it is wine. Nothing could ever hurt us.

And when I walk away from you I hold my had up high, and so do you. We know we'll come back to drink from each other's thoughts. Until then I take in the wind, let it blow my heart up like a balloon, sitting up on the fence watching the wind chase the clouds across the sky, and the sun lighting up the horizon in bright red. Ever so new, ever so alive.
